There are many good things to write stories about. You could write about love, or friendship, or relaxing days when you drink some hot tea and think about your life in the reminiscent way that hindsight brings.

But there are even more bad things. War, poverty, famine, disease, death... So many things plague this world, and you could write a story about any of them.

But it wouldn't be a happy story. It would be a story that people don't want to read, and those that do would regret it. No one wants to read a story that makes them unhappy.

Given these choices, sometimes the best thing to write a story about is nothing.

Absolutely nothing.

Chapter 6 by Eloise

So stop reading this story, considering it is about NOTHING.

Seriously, go away.

I MEAN IT!

Chapter 7 by LethalPianist

Nothing can come from reading a story about nothing.

So nothing should affect you.

Not even our insistence at making you stop reading about this story.

But rest assured...

This story is about nothing.

Nothing will happen, nobody will die, nothing will begin, nothing will end, nothing at all.

But in the nothingness there is a story.

Chapter 8 by Katherine Sun

But you won't, will you? Because you want me to give you something. Something to entertain you, something to stimulate your imagination and make your brain work.

Sorry, i can't give you anything.

I have nothing to give.

I have nothing.

I don't have a goal, a hobby, a lover, or a substance.

I don't even have a name.

So go- go find something that makes your heart race. Go find someone that makes your heart pound. Go find a story where your tears fall because the tragedy is real enough to pull you in.

And I'll be here, keeping myself company.
